TEAMS OF REFERENCES

1. Purpose

This requirement states what the Border Management Authority's National Border Targeting Centre requires of two unmanned aerial systems with mobile ground control stations and high-bandwidth data links, for the observation of vulnerable segments on the land borderline by Information Professionals of the National Border Targeting Centre, working with the Authority's geospatial capability. It gives effect to item 45 of the approved Procurement Plan for 2026/27.

2. Background

The Land Segment Risk Assessment scores six sectors of the land borderline and, within each, identifies and maps the vulnerable segments: specific stretches where opportunity for the adversary meets weakness in control, being a known footpath, a shallow river crossing, a stretch of failed fence, an informal vehicle track or a rail siding. Those segments are held as a single geospatial layer, and a segment is the unit on which a commander acts.

One of the criteria by which a segment is declared vulnerable is the absence or weakness of surveillance on it. Where the Authority has no means of detection, the absence of recorded incidents carries no evidential weight and is recorded as a collection gap rather than as reassurance. The Authority has no means of its own to place observation on a named segment, at a time of its choosing, and recover what it sees into the intelligence record. That is the gap this procurement closes.

3. Capability Required

3.1 How the capability is tasked

The capability is a collection means and is tasked as one. The vulnerable segment layer identifies the segment; the Centre writes a requirement against a named threat category, that segment and a latest useful date; a sortie is flown; what is observed returns as an event carrying its position, time, sensor and operator; the event is graded and enters the register; and the outcome is recorded against the requirement that prompted it. Each step is attributable to a named person and retained.

3.2 What is not being bought

Three exclusions matter at specification stage. This is not a capability for detecting or defeating the adversary's own uncrewed systems: Uncrewed Systems Exploitation (X6) is a threat category the Authority scores, and countering it requires detection means that are not bought here. It is not a persistent surveillance system, because two systems cannot hold coverage over a frontage of this length, and the value lies in observing a named segment for a defined period against a stated requirement. And it observes and records only: it carries nothing, intervenes in nothing, and does not reduce the need for patrol.

4. Scope

4.1 Geographic coverage

The six sectors of the land borderline, being the Namibia, Botswana, Zimbabwe, Mozambique, Eswatini and Lesotho frontages, together with the approach and departure corridors that serve them and the perimeters of land ports of entry where a vulnerable segment abuts a port. The systems must work across all six, which means operation in heat and dust on the arid Namibia and Botswana frontages and at altitude on the mountainous Lesotho frontage, where reduced air density cuts available lift and endurance.

The maritime border law enforcement area and the aviation domain are out of scope, with reason. Over-water operation and recovery need endurance, airframe and recovery arrangements these systems are not being bought to provide, and specifying for both would produce a platform that does neither well.

4.2 Operators

The systems are operated by Information Professionals in Information and Risk Analysis, not by a dedicated flight unit. That has a design consequence the Authority will hold to. The system must be flown to a competent and lawful standard by an operator whose primary discipline is analysis, on a short training pipeline, with mission planning driven from the segment layer rather than from raw coordinate entry. A platform that needs specialist aircrew to be useful does not meet this requirement whatever its performance.

4.3 Quantity and composition

Two complete systems. Each comprises the air vehicle with spares, the sensor payload, the mobile ground control station, the data link, battery provision for three consecutive sorties without recharging, transit cases, and the maintenance and consumable set for twelve months. Both are held and tasked by the Centre rather than allocated permanently to a sector, so that either frontage can be reinforced or both systems concentrated on one segment for a sustained task.

5. Requirements

5.1 Air vehicle and endurance

Endurance of not less than sixty minutes per sortie with the full payload fitted, and battery provision as stated above, so that a segment can be held across the dusk transition when foot crossings concentrate. Operating radius from the ground control station of not less than ten kilometres, matching the inland depth of the border law enforcement area, so that a station on a patrol road can reach the line and return. Launch and recovery by one operator from a vehicle, with no prepared strip.

Acoustic signature low enough that the aircraft is not routinely audible from the ground at observation altitude. A system that announces the observation defeats the purpose of making it.

5.2 Sensors and geolocation

A stabilised gimbal carrying electro-optical and thermal imaging, switchable in flight. Optical and thermal performance must be sufficient to classify rather than merely detect at the stated operating radius, by day and by night: to tell a person from an animal and a light vehicle from a freight vehicle. Detection alone does not support a tasking decision and is not accepted as meeting this requirement.

Geolocation of an observed object to an accuracy the supplier states and demonstrates, good enough to be written into the geospatial record as an event position and acted on by a responding team. Recording onboard at full sensor resolution continues whatever the state of the data link.

5.3 Mobile ground control station

The ground control station must be transportable by two people, operable from inside a vehicle and able to run from vehicle supply as well as its own. A display readable in direct sunlight. Full function with no connectivity, with the sortie record queued and synchronised on return to signal, which is the same requirement the Authority sets for field capture and exists for the same reason: much of the borderline has no coverage. Mission planning from the vulnerable segment layer, so that an operator selects a named segment rather than entering coordinates.

5.4 Data link and communications

Encrypted and authenticated command and control, and an encrypted high-bandwidth video downlink to the ground control station, resistant to spoofing of both the control link and the positioning signal. Behaviour on link loss must be set before flight, either continue the planned sortie or return to the launch point, and the loss and the action taken are recorded.

Onward relay from the ground control station to the Centre must be possible where bearer capacity at the site allows. It is not required to be continuous, because bearer capacity on the borderline cannot be assumed and a design that depends on it will fail where it is most needed. All spectrum used must be lawful in the Republic and must be stated.

5.5 Geospatial integration and output

Every image, video segment and detection carries position, time, sensor, altitude and operator identity as structured data, and exports into the Authority's geospatial capability as a layer and as events within its incident lifecycle, under its classification and access controls. A sortie does not create a separate register.

An observation enters as an event, not as a verified incident. Promotion to a verified incident requires a user holding the verification role, as it does for any other report. The sortie record must state what was covered and what was not, so that a segment flown and found quiet is distinguishable from a segment that was never flown. The first is evidence. The second is a collection gap and must not read as reassurance.

5.6 Boundary geofencing and flight record

A hard geofence on the international boundary, with a stated buffer, which the operator cannot override in flight. An inadvertent crossing of the line is a sovereignty incident, and Unauthorised Incursion and Sovereignty Violation (S1) is a category the Authority itself assesses against others. The boundary data is loaded by the Authority from its own authoritative layer and is not supplied, held or updated by the manufacturer.

Every sortie produces a tamper-evident flight log recording the track flown, retained by the Authority, so that compliance with the geofence can be proved after the event to the Authority's satisfaction and to a neighbouring state's.

5.7 Regulatory compliance and certification

Operation falls under the Civil Aviation Act, 13 of 2009, and Part 101 of the Civil Aviation Regulations. The supplier delivers the documentation the Authority needs in order to obtain and hold an operator certificate: an operations manual capable of approval, the maintenance schedule and records, and the aircraft documentation required for registration and approval. Remote pilot training to licence standard is delivered for each named operator.

Where a task would require flight beyond visual line of sight, at night, or in proximity to persons or structures, the supplier identifies the additional approval required and the system is capable of meeting the conditions attached to it. Third-party liability cover must be in place at commissioning.

5.8 Security, data handling and privacy

No imagery, telemetry or flight log may be routed through a manufacturer or third-party service as a condition of the system functioning, and firmware and boundary updates must be installable offline. The supplier states what the system transmits and to where, and the Authority verifies that statement by network capture at acceptance. Imagery and logs are encrypted at rest on both the aircraft and the ground station, and the aircraft store can be erased remotely.

The inland band of the border law enforcement area is populated. Imagery of identifiable persons is personal information under the Protection of Personal Information Act, 4 of 2013. It is held for a stated retention period, used only for the purpose for which the sortie was tasked, and controlled by user tier within the geospatial record.

5.9 Training and skills transfer

The Authority operates this capability itself. Training covers remote pilot operation to licence standard, payload operation and imagery interpretation, first-line maintenance and battery management, mission planning from the segment layer, and administration of the flight record and the geofence. It is delivered against documented procedures with a demonstrated competence check for each named operator, not presented as a course.

6. Recorded Gaps

The segment-by-segment survey that would fix the endurance and radius actually needed on each frontage has not been done. The minima at 5.1 are the Authority's stated requirement, derived from the ten kilometre inland depth of the border law enforcement area, and not a measured operating need; they will be tested against the first year of use.

Spectrum availability for the data link has not been established and will differ between sectors. Nor is it established that approval for flight beyond visual line of sight will be granted for border tasks, which is why this requirement is written so that the capability is useful without it.

7. Acceptance

Acceptance is on a real sortie against a real segment, not on a demonstration flight. The capability is accepted when the following are shown:

- A segment selected from the vulnerable segment layer is flown end to end, and the sortie record states what was covered and what was not.
- A person and a light vehicle are classified by day and by night at the stated operating radius, and the position of each is returned to the stated accuracy.
- Observations enter the geospatial capability as events carrying position, time, sensor, altitude and operator, under its access controls, and require the verification role to be promoted.
- The ground control station operates with connectivity disabled and synchronises the sortie record on return to signal without loss.
- The geofence refuses an operator attempt to cross the international boundary, and the flight log evidences both the attempt and the refusal.
- Network capture shows no imagery, telemetry or log traffic leaving for a manufacturer or third-party service.
- Each named operator holds a remote pilot licence, and the operations manual, maintenance schedule and aircraft documentation are delivered in a form the regulator will accept.
